

A Weekend in Mumbai – My Last Hurrah!!

Well, I am the person for the big gesture and so when I was asked who I would have a weekend with if it could be anyone in the world; an A rated movie star, a musician, an artist, I wanted only one person. I wanted a weekend with my vegetable girl. I was asked to write up an itinerary and I came up with the following:

Limousine to Heathrow.

9.45 pm First class Virgin flight to Mumbai.

Limousine from Chhatrapati Shivaji International Airport to the Sea Princess Hotel at Juhu Beach.

Sign in to my favourite suite at £800 per night and an excellent view; a 50 foot long window on to the Indian Ocean.

Rest for the afternoon. The best massage in India for Joanne, if required.

An evening of classical Indian music. I would book my own classical duet to play for us in our suite. A private occasion with champagne and delicacies.

A midnight stroll on the beach.

Morning tea and newspapers. Omelettes made by the number one omelette maker in the world, for breakfast.

Goldsmiths and Jewellers for gold toe rings and Rajasthani earrings that she could wear for me and fulfil another fantasy.

Limousine travel to the Gate of India where Queen Victoria landed in the 1870s. Light brunch in the exclusive hideaway French restaurant that I discovered previously. Speedboat racing in the ocean, (customers always win right at the end).

Lazy afternoon.

Evening meal at private suite of Kou Japanese restaurant (too exclusive to give full name). Order food and two bottles of champagne and 7 selected wines, and tell the waiter not to return for three hours unless summoned.

Limousine to Poison nightclub, reserved only for A-listers, with Asia's number one DJ, Aqeel.

Have Arabian tents constructed on private part of Juhu beach for our return. Lovemaking.

Sleep for the day in the Arabian fantasy tents with occasional dips in the ocean as required. Indian barbeque.

Sleep all night.

Limousine to airport and first class return to London.

Total cost: approx £30,000 (not including jewellery). Nice. Will she make my dream come true?
